Gavin meets with CLA members in Brewood

Sir Gavin Williamson continues to fight on behalf farmers and landowners across Staffordshire as punitive Government policies continue to threaten the viability of the sector.

As part of Sir Gavin's ongoing campaign to urge the Government to change course, he met with representatives from the Country Land and Business Association as well as local farmers in Brewood to hear directly their concerns and fears owing to changes to Inheritance Tax.

From April 2026 onwards, Agricultural Property Relief will change so that agricultural assets will be subject to inheritance tax at a rate of 20% after the first £1 million. Despite many farmers struggling with production costs and shrinking margins, the Government continue to pursue policies that threaten food security and the viability of the sector.

Natalie Oakes, Midlands CLA Manager said: "The meeting with Sir Gavin Williamson MP was highly constructive, offering members a valuable opportunity to engage directly with him.

"We had a wide ranging discussion that addressed topics such as Inheritance Tax changes, planning reform, and the unexpected closure of farming schemes, covering both the challenges and opportunities facing our rural communities."

Sir Gavin said: "I was delighted to meet with Staffordshire CLA members to discuss their understandable concerns regarding punitive policies that are having a detrimental impact on family farms and estates.

"Changes to Inheritance Tax, Business Property Relief, and Agricultural Property Relief are making farming unviable for so many and threatening food security at a crucial time in our geopolitics.

"I urge the Government to reverse these damaging policies and will be doing all I can to pressure Ministers to give farming in Staffordshire and across the UK a fighting chance.

"The roundtable was also a useful opportunity to discuss concerns regarding rural crime which blights farmers and those who enjoy our countryside. I am committed to engaging with Staffordshire Police to address these very important issues and will do all I can to reduce the impact of rural crime."

Gavin shows support to Stone Emergency Services

Sir Gavin Williamson celebrated Stone's emergency services by attending an event designed to raise awareness of the organisations and personnel that respond to incidents across the town.

Organisations including Staffordshire Police, National Highways, Midlands Air Ambulance, Stone First Responders, Staffordshire Rescue and others brought their vehicles and carried out demonstrations.

AED Donate were also on hand to raise awareness of CPR as well as the importance of defibrillators which are shown to drastically improve someone's chances of survival if they suffer a heart attack in an out of hospital setting.

Jamie Richards, Chief Executive of AED Donate said: "It was fantastic to see so many people lining the High Street and engaging with our incredible emergency services.

"We are deeply grateful to all the services and organisations who joined us on the day – your presence made this event truly special. I think it's even a first for Stone High Street to host a helicopter – and seeing it here created a real buzz for everyone."

Sir Gavin said: "I was delighted to attend the event to raise awareness of the truly amazing work done by emergency services in Stone and the wider area.

"When we think of emergency services, the first organisations that come to mind are the police, fire, and ambulance; but there are so many others that work tirelessly to tackle emergencies from locating missing people, to environmental catastrophes including flooding and rescuing stranding motorists from dangerous roads.

"I am so grateful to all those who come to our aid during the most difficult times, and look forward to continuing supporting these vital organisations in anyway possible."

Gavin attends Haywoods Flower and Vegetable Show

Sir Gavin Williamson attended the annual Haywoods Flower and Vegetable show which is always held on the second Sunday in September.

The event is organised by volunteers – bringing the community together with prizes in various categories with 116 opportunities to enter ranging from best flower to biggest pumpkin.

Organisations including Hixon First Responders, Guide Dogs for the Blind, local PCSO's, and the RNLi attended to offer advice and support as well as fundraise for their vital causes that make a huge difference to communities across Staffordshire.

The group do not make a profit, and simply aim to ensure costs can be covered for the event, refreshments, and raffle ticket sales.

Sir Gavin said: "I was delighted to attend the Haywoods Flower and Vegetable show and see so many residents across Colwich, Little Haywood, and Great Haywood taking part in such a fantastic competition.

"These events really bring the community together and enable residents to socialise as well as raise money for important causes.

"I would like to thank the hard working volunteers for their efforts – without them, these events would not be able to take place."

Gavin calls for greater sepsis awareness

Sir Gavin Williamson is calling for greater awareness of the signs and symptoms of sepsis – an ‘indiscriminate killer.’

Sir Gavin attended a Parliamentary event alongside neighbouring MP Mike Wood, former Premier League football manager Harry Redknapp, and ‘bionic peer’ Lord Mackinlay. Mike Wood MP and Lord Mackinlay have both spoken passionately and bravely regarding their battles with sepsis, whilst Harry Redknapp has campaigned for greater awareness since his wife Sandra’s battle in 2018.

Sepsis is life-threatening and claims 11 million lives globally each year – including 48,000 in the UK. Signs and symptoms include: slurred speech or confusion, extreme shivering or muscle pain, passing no urine in a day, and severe breathlessness.

Founder and Chief Medical Officer of The UK Sepsis Trust, Dr Ron Daniels BEM, said: “Sepsis is an indiscriminate killer that affects 245,000 people in the UK every year. With at least 48,000 people losing their lives annually to sepsis-related illnesses – more than breast, bowel, and prostate cancer combined – the need for action is clear.

“We’re so grateful to Sir Gavin who has pledged to support our campaign and our work, this September and beyond. His commitment is crucial in the fight against sepsis, and will help us to raise lifesaving awareness in communities across the UK.”

Sir Gavin said: “Sepsis is more common than a heart attack or stroke – but signs and symptoms are less commonly known. Therefore, I was pleased to attend this important Parliamentary event to shine a light on this devastating condition.

“I would like to pay tribute to my colleague Mike Wood MP, Lord Mackinlay, and Harry Redknapp for being so open as to how sepsis has affected their lives. Their inspirational stories will be of so much support to sufferers as well as loved ones.

“I am committed to doing all I can to help ensure that people can spot the signs and symptoms of sepsis to ensure the best possible chance of survival.”

Gavin works to help secure funding for St Michael's Hall

Sir Gavin Williamson is working alongside the trustees of St Michael's Hall to secure funding that will help maintain the building for many years to come.

Situated at the bottom of Stone High Street, the spacious hall hosts many community events including craft fairs, bingo evenings, and various theatrical productions.

St Michael's Hall was built on Lichfield Street in 1911, and was originally a Working Men's Club prior to being transformed into a community asset.

Work in the region of tens of thousands of pounds is needed to address roof repairs as well as fit insulation. Sir Gavin is helping the Trustees of the Hall to identify suitable grants that can help with renovations.

Dennis Abbott, Treasurer at St Michael's Hall said: "The Hall has been a centre for the community for the past 115 years – offering a pleasant and affordable venue for the townsfolk of Stone and the surrounding area.

"It has progressed from its origins as a Working Man's Club through to being a social club to a community hall; hosting many community groups. We would like it to remain viable for the next 115 years at least, but it is need of some tlc and financial investment,"

Sir Gavin said: "I was delighted to meet with Dennis at St Michael's Hall and learn more about the fantastic work that volunteers undertake to maintain such an important community asset.

"These venues are the lifeblood of communities – providing a spacious, safe place for people of all ages and backgrounds to socialise and participate in various classes.

"I am committed to supporting the Hall obtain the grants that are necessary to modernise the venue and ensure that it can be used for generations to come."

1st September 2025

Gavin attends West Midlands Hedgehog Open Day

Sir Gavin Williamson attended the West Midlands Hedgehog (WMH) open event in Cheslyn Hay to support fundraising efforts to care for hedgehogs.

Joan Lockley BEM, has dedicated much of her life to care for injured and sick hedgehogs as well as to provide conservation advice.

WMH was established in 2002 and since then Joan has built a hedgehog 'hosprickal' in her garden with over 400 injured or sick hedgehogs being cared for each year.

The annual open day, hosted at Hawkins Sport and Social Club, the event raises awareness of the plight of hedgehogs, and raises important funds to enable Joan to maintain her amazing work.

Joan Lockley BEM said: "Sir Gavin has always been an avid supporter of my work rescuing the much endangered National Favourite Wild Animal, the humble hedgehog. I am always grateful for Sir Gavin's help and support."

Sir Gavin said: "Joan is a true champion and a strong advocate of protecting and caring for hedgehogs across Staffordshire.

"Joan's tireless campaigning for the welfare of hedgehogs has raised significant awareness of a beloved species. Joan's open days bring the community together and raise vital funds that can help continue such amazing work."

"I was delighted to attend the open event and look forward to supporting Joan's work for many years to come."

PERSUASIVE COMMUNICATION by Mike Newton

This summer I took the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) summer course in Persuasive Communication.

I have been interested in this topic for many years, but never addressed it from a scientific framework. (I also took a parallel course in Leadership and Innovation.)

The trigger to act was my defeat in the County Council elections, following on from another loss as General Election candidate in Wolverhampton. Although there are a lot of excuses that can be made for those two defeats, as a candidate you always have to look deep in yourself and think 'was there anything I could have done better'? And communication, being the most important factor in modern politics, was the obvious place to start.

The course was under the tutelage of Professor Edward Schiappa, a legendary name in communications theory. I will not give a full synopsis, but here are some thoughts that are most applicable to the predicament we as Conservatives find ourselves in today.

The ELM Model

The Elaboration Likelihood Model is the building block of modern communication theory. Persuasion takes place through two cognitive channels: the central and the peripheral. The central route involves detailed, evidence-based reasoning. The peripheral involves gut reactions, rules of thumb and other examples of what are called 'heuristics'.

For the purpose of politics the central is the ideal but the overwhelming likelihood is that the peripheral will be the more used. Arguments made via the central route are 'stickier' but to get the level of engagement necessary what is known as MAT is needed.

This stands for Motivation, Ability and Time, namely does someone want to be persuaded, do they have the ability to grasp the arguments and do they have the time? The likelihood is that for most people we engage with, they won't.

This leaves us with the peripheral route. This relies heavily on short, clear messages, backed by good stories and images. Social media plays a vital part in this.

Often the peripheral route will be driven by factors that we may not fully expect, or understand. But the reality is that the old days of persuading voters through detailed lists of historical achievements or future policies have gone. People simply do not have the time or interest. Perception is more critical than ever.

The Cialdini Principles

These are a scientific way of categorizing various gut feelings and using them to persuade. They are: unity, reciprocity, consistency, social proof, liking, scarcity and authority.

I will not go through all of these today but will pick out three vital ones in politics.

Liking is very powerful. As part of the course I conducted an experiment on several friends, ranging from a League Two goalkeeper to a senior Conservative figure. None of them said they used liking as a tool, yet all of them referred to the other principles!

In America, where I worked for several years, conscious use of liking would be absolutely vital. Would you buy from someone you didn't like unless it was absolutely necessary? Perhaps it is just not in our culture in Britain, but we need to deploy this powerful weapon of liking more. (Liking is, of course, different from being obsequious, which is not recommended as it is invariably inauthentic.)

As Professor Schiappa said, in one of the most memorable moments of the course, 'You must try to like your audience and engage with them on things that interest them. If you don't like them, what chance do you have that they will like you?'

Unity in this context means being part of the group. He or she is 'one of us' is one of the strongest persuasive tools in politics. This can mean being local, of a particular ethnic or social group, or just being very embedded with the voters. The latter really matters, as too often we have been tone-deaf to the voters' concerns and allowed Reform to occupy that space.

We must do better in engaging with the voters we need to persuade on the things that matter to them, not us, and this means greater emphasis on unity. The patronizing attitude of 'what the voters ought to have, rather than what they want' belongs to a different Britain from the past and is a dead-end for us. We must be closer to the needs of those we exist to serve.

Social Proof. This is mainly endorsements, recommendations, and likes and content sharing on social media etc. A third party endorsement is worth a lot more than you telling everyone how wonderful you are, particularly in the digital age.

The Six Steps to Persuasion

These are the basic MIT rules of persuasive communication, applicable to most settings from one-on-one to large audiences, and across all media from old-school town hall meetings to Zoom.

Identify your audience - who exactly am I addressing and what do I need to convey?

Identify your purpose - is this task-driven (getting them to do something like vote Conservative) or relationship-driven (like attending a memorial ceremony)?

Assess the degree of difficulty - how tough is the job going to be? Will it be a hostile or friendly audience? Do I need to mainly use a central or peripheral route (remember the MAT rule outlined earlier).

Choose your medium - should I use face-to-face (better for complex challenges) or is this a job for another medium, such as email? There are many choices available.

Adapt the message to the medium - there are numerous variations on this, for instance a deep analysis of fiscal policy is not suitable for TikTok but an issue about pedestrian crossing safety might be.

Confirm your identity - who am I and how do I want to come across?

I did a case study for the course using my specific experience as Parliamentary Candidate in Wolverhampton West of outreach to minority groups such as Sikhs and West Africans based on the Six Steps. It is a very illuminating way to devise a strategy, and also review it ex post.

Storytelling

Stories are very effective. They humanize us. People love them, and always want to listen to them (although they will quickly tune out for bad ones). They can be used to push across many of the Cialdini Principles, particularly if they are autobiographical. Use this tool.

There are many theories around the power of stories, such as 'Emotional Contagion Theory' and 'Cultural Transmission Theory'. Stories always beat statistics.

The Power of the Image

Research suggests that images are retained far better by the brain than oral information: perhaps up to 80% more. The power of the image is something we need to fully develop as a political weapon.

MIT believes very strongly in the power of persona, which is tied closely into physical imagery. How exactly do I want to be perceived is the first question in developing a persona, the second being how do I validate that persona (particularly online, where images are king)?

It is of course important that you pick an authentic persona, and in the business of persuasion it is essential that the persona is applied consistently both online and off it. And pictures are a vital part of this. Good photos, well composed and lit, and presenting who you want to be seen as, are critically important.

One of the most interesting parts of the course was portrait analysis. Professor Schiappa had us analyze two photos of him: one looking like he had been steam cleaned and professionally groomed, black and white and which was beautifully lit, and another, fuzzy in focus, looking like a typical academic with books everywhere and a face like he had just got out of bed.

For certain formal situations, it is obvious that the first picture should be used. But the second picture was more human and relatable. Adapt choice of images to suit situations.

Your online profile picture is vitally important so make sure it is a good one technically and conveys your chosen persona.

For me, I recently had a choice to use these two pictures for my WhatsApp.

I chose the second one. Although I like the first one more, I prefer having the option to look more professional, although the trade-off is that I look more formal. If I was single I'd definitely use the first one though!

There is no right answer, but plenty of wrong ones!

On Zoom or other media, make sure that you are appropriately dressed and well-lit, always from the side and front, and the camera lens is clean so you don't look fuzzy. The background should always be appropriate to the persona you are trying to convey.

The Use of Digital

We now take at least 2/3 of our news (not opinion or content but actual news) from social media, according to MIT research. I was initially shocked it was that high but I now find it is totally believable. And that number will only rise .

The leaflet as a frontline weapon in politics is now dead except in certain very specialist situations. The blunt truth is that the most time and money spent on leafleting would be far better used in producing social media content, however much a break with tradition and habit that is for our party.

I was speaking at length on this subject to a top GB News journalist last week, and it was evident that Reform has a huge, and very successful, operation using Instagram, TikTok and YouTube targeting younger voters. No one under 60 reads a leaflet.

Online content with good images and stories packed with the Cialdini Principles, is the only way to go. Pick a medium that suits your target audience and become the master of it.

Dealing with Insurgency

In 1998 a professional wrestler called Jesse Ventura won the election to become the Governor of Minnesota as an independent. Ventura beat two respectable, polished, mainstream establishment candidates from the Republican and Democratic parties. The MIT course covered this campaign, won by a true insurgent, extensively.

The insurgent won for a variety of reasons. His persuasive communication was far better than the mainstreamers.

This clearly reminded me of the challenges we face (although now perhaps it is us who are the insurgents, not Reform). So I asked Professor Schiappa what the main reason usually is why insurgents win and his answer was blunt: because the established parties have stopped listening to their voters. There is a message for all of us in that.

Here's a brief MIT analysis of how insurgents can be countered:

Area - What Could Have Been Done Better

Messaging - Address voter discontent and counter outsider appeal

Advertising - Use creative, memorable ads targeting young voters

Voter engagement - Mobilize non-traditional voters through grassroots

Debates and appearances - Adopt authentic tone and direct engage insurgent's critiques

Media strategy - Gain earned media and control campaign narrative

I'm happy to pick up on any of the above, and indeed beyond the above, at any time.

Remember - YOU are the message.
